

Meet Beata

Beata Cosgrove's photography dates back over 15 years to her time in Poland, when she became interested in capturing images that show the unique interactions between people. A year in India saw this interest develop into a passion, with the colours, festivals and cultures of the subcontinent providing endless inspiration. While in India, she also took practical courses in photography, which she continued back in London at Central Saint Martin's-the University of the Arts. After taking courses in black and white printing and fashion photography, she became a relatively late convert to digital. A long-term resident of Bath, Beata has exhibited in the annual Bear Flat Artists Open Studios events. She is also an active member of the Royal Photographic Society and a contributor to image sales libraries. She is rarely seen without her camera, and has a passion for capturing pictures, which portray the unexpected drama of everyday life.
